NEW QUESTION: 1

Which type of information about users does biometrics evaluate?

- A. phrases a user has memorized
- B. physical characteristics of a user
- C. objects a user carries with him or her
- D. where a user is located

Answer: B

Explanation:

Biometrics refers to authentication techniques that rely on measurable physical characteristics that can be automatically checked.

Note: There are several types of biometric identification schemes:

- face: the analysis of facial characteristics
- fingerprint: the analysis of an individual's unique fingerprints
- hand geometry: the analysis of the shape of the hand and the length of the fingers
- retina: the analysis of the capillary vessels located at the back of the eye
- iris: the analysis of the colored ring that surrounds the eye's pupil
- signature: the analysis of the way a person signs his name.
- vein: the analysis of pattern of veins in the back of the hand and the wrist
- voice: the analysis of the tone, pitch, cadence and frequency of a person's voice.

NEW QUESTION: 2

You are designing a data warehouse that contains a product dimension.

The product dimension contains the original product attributes as well as the most recent set of updated attributes. When a product is updated, the original product attributes must be preserved.

The product dimension design must:

Support a Type 3 Slowly Changing Dimension (SCD) process

Minimize the total storage consumed

You need to design a solution that meets these requirements. What should you do?

- A. Design a table to hold the surrogate key for each product and its attributes. Add a column to store an indicator that identifies the record as original data or recent data.
- B. Design two tables. One table will hold the original product surrogate key and attributes. The other table will hold the most recent product surrogate key and attributes.
- C. Design a table to hold the surrogate key for each product and its attributes as well as additional columns to store the original attributes.
- D. Design a table as a Type 2 SCD dimension that holds the surrogate key for each product and its attributes. Limit the number of records per product within the table to two.
