NEW QUESTION: 1

- A. Option B
- B. Option C
- C. Option E
- D. Option D
- E. Option A

Answer: B,E

Explanation:

A: Assembly versions are everywhere in SharePoint - web.config files, web part definitions, workflow definitions, event receiver bindings - the list goes on. In each case, the version number is absolutely required so that SharePoint can load the code to run at that time. If you update an assembly's version, you have two choices to ensure your code can still be loaded:

/ Find and update every reference to the previous assembly version.

/ Use a binding redirect in the relevant .config file (e.g. web.config) to point to the new version of the assembly.

C: Assembly Version : This is the version number used by framework during build and at runtime to locate, link and load the assemblies. When you add reference to any assembly in your project, it is this version number which gets embedded. At runtime, CLR looks for assembly with this version number to load. But remember this version is used along with name, public key token and culture information only if the assemblies are strong-named signed. If assemblies are not strong-named signed, only file names are used for loading.

Incorrect:

not B: Assembly File Version : This is the version number given to file as in file system. It is displayed by Windows Explorer. Its never used by .NET framework or runtime for referencing.

From scenario:

*solution artifacts must adhere to industry best practices.

*Code based hot fixes must be deployed directly to the Global Assembly Cache on all SharePoint servers.

*Only one version of an assembly must be available at runtime.
