NEW QUESTION: 1

Which one of the following input validation routines is not likely to be appropriate in a real-time operation?

- A. Sequence check
- B. Sign check

- C. Reasonableness check.
- D. Redundant data check.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The program controls listed prescreen or edit data prior to processing, but the sequence check is most likely to be used only in batch processing. A sequence -heck lets to determine that records are in proper order. For example, a payroll input file can be sorted into Social Security number order. A sequence check can then be performed to verify record order. This control would not apply in a real-time operation be :-,use records are not processed sequentially.
