NEW QUESTION: 4

According to Michael E Porter's generic strategies model, a firm that successfully adopts a differentiation strategy is most likely to:

- A. Risk overlooking product changes.
- B. Be able to pass supplier cost increases on to its customers.
- C. Closely supervise its labor force.
- D. Tend to disregard cost control.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Differentiation is the generic strategy favored by firms that seek competitive advantage through providing a unique product or service and that have a broad competitive scope. A successful differentiation strategy creates a consumer perception that few, if any, substitutes are available. Thus, a firm that adopts this strategy may have the additional advantage of being able to pass supplier cost increases to consumers.
