NEW QUESTION: 4

You have a Windows Communication Foundation (WCF) service. The service will be consumed by following clients:

- * a Windows Store application
 - * an ASP.NET Core web application
 - * a Java application developed and hosted by an external vendor
- You need to generate proxies for each of these clients to that they can consume the WCF service.

What should you implement? To answer, drag the most appropriate implementation options to the correct application type. Each option may be used once, more than once, or not at all. You may need to drag the split bar between panes or scroll to view content.

NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point.

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation

Box 1: WSDL endpoint

If you have any clients who are not .NET (like Java or PHP, for example), ChannelFactory won't work for them as that is specific to .NET and WCF. In that case, you'll either have to publish the metadata or send the client a WSDL endpoint so they can create the proxy via whatever means their language of choice uses.

Box 2: SVCUtil.exe and ChannelFactory

The use of the following classes is supported for Windows Store Applications:

ChannelFactory

DuplexChannelFactory<TChannel>;

CallbackBehaviorAttribute

Svcutil.exe can be used to generate the proxy class file. This tool generates the proxy class file and the App.config file.

Box 3: Connected Services

In Asp.Net core you will notice that, we don't have the option "Add Service Reference like in the older .Net Framework. The solution for this is WCFConnectedService.

Service reference

The Asp.Net core web app can use service references to create service contracts

Box 4: Service reference The Windows Forms app can use service references to create service contracts WCF Connected services
