NEW QUESTION: 1

Which answer BEST describes a secure cryptoprocessor that can be used to store cryptographic keys, passwords or certificates in a component located on the motherboard of a computer?

- A. Enigma Machine
- B. TPM - Trusted Procedure Module
- C. TPM - Trusted Platform Module
- D. Smart Card

Answer: C

Explanation:

The Trusted Platform Module (TPM) is an international standard for a secure cryptoprocessor. The TPM technical specification was written by a computer industry consortium called the Trusted Computing Group (TCG). The International Organization for Standardization (ISO) and the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) standardized the specification as ISO/IEC 11889 in 2009.

A TPM is a specialized chip that can be installed on the motherboard of a computer and is used for hardware authentication. The TPM authenticates the computer in question rather than the user. TPM uses the boot sequence of the computer to determine the trusted status of a platform. The TPM places the cryptographic processes at the hardware level. If someone removes the drives and attempts to boot the hard drive from another computer, the hard drive will fail and deny all access. This provides a greater level of security than a software encryption option that may have only been used to encrypt a few folders on the hard drive. TPM was designed as an inexpensive way to securely report the environment that booted and to identify the system.

The following answers are incorrect:

-TPM - Trusted Procedure Module: Almost, TPM is right but it's Trusted Platform Module, not Procedure. Read the questions carefully to avoid mistakes like this.

-Smart Card: Sorry, smart cards do not have cryptoprocessors.

-Enigma Machine: This is a great answer but it is incorrect because the Enigma Machine is an invention by the German Engineer Arthur Scherbius at the end of WWI. The Enigma was used by the Germans to encrypt Military communications throughout WWII and remained classified well into the 1970s.
