NEW QUESTION: 1

Which component resides in the System Global Area (SGA) of a database instance only in shared server connections?

- A. Program Global Area
- B. PL/SQL Function Result Cache
- C. User Global Area
- D. SQL Query Result Cache

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2

You are the network administrator of a small Layer 2 network with 50 users. Lately, users have been complaining that the network is very slow. While troubleshooting, you notice that the CAM table of your switch is full, although it supports up to 12, 000 MAC addresses. How can you solve this issue and prevent it from happening in the future?

- A. Configure VLAN access lists
- B. Configure Dynamic ARP inspection
- C. Configure BPDU guard
- D. Upgrade the switches
- E. Configure port security

Answer: E

Explanation:

Enabling Port Security Port security is either autoconfigured or enabled manually by specifying a MAC address. If a MAC address is not specified, the source address from the incoming traffic is autoconfigured and secured, up to the maximum number of MAC addresses allowed. These autoconfigured MAC addresses remain secured for a time, depending upon the aging timer set. The autoconfigured MAC addresses are cleared from the port in case of a link-down event.

When you enable port security on a port, any dynamic CAM entries that are associated with the port are cleared. If there are any currently configured static or permanent CAM entries on that same port, you may not be able to enable the port-security on that port. If this is the case, clear the configured static and permanent earl entries on that port and then enable port-security. To enable port security, perform this task in privileged mode:
