Regarding risk reduction, which of the following answers is BEST defined by the process of giving only just enough access to information necessary for them to perform their job functions?
A. Least Privilege Principle
B. Implicit Information Princple
C. Minimum Privilege Princple
D. Mandatory Privilege Requirement
Answer: A
Explanation:
Discussion: When we manage information and access to it, it is sensible to apply a standard that defines how much access the users is to get.

The best guide to use is the Least Privilege Principle because anything less restrictive is taking a risk that is unnecessary to your organization and therefore unwise.
When a users has ONLY access to information and resources necessary for his or her job functions you limit the damage that can be done with the users access.
Consider how, when a computer is infected and operations can be undertaken using that user's account and if it is malicious, much damage can ensue.
Also, you can contain the theft of your information resources by limiting access of the users. Least Privilege Principle is a good standard to manage your access for users.
The following answers are incorrect:
-Minimum Privilege Principle: Almost but not quite the correct term. The words Minimum and Least are similar but the common term is Least Privilege.
-Mandatory Privilege Requirement: This isn't a correct answer but might look that way because it sounds official. Sorry.
-Implicit Information Principle: Also an incorrect term that looks pretty official.
