NEW QUESTION: 1

A quality assurance analyst is reviewing a new software product for security, and has complete access to the code and data structures used by the developers. This is an example of which of the following types of testing?

- A. White box
- B. Black box
- C. Penetration
- D. Gray box

Answer: A

Explanation:

White box testing is the process of testing an application when you have detailed knowledge of the inner workings of the application.

White-box testing (also known as clear box testing, glass box testing, transparent box testing, and structural testing) is a method of testing software that tests internal structures or workings of an application, as opposed to its functionality (i.e. black-box testing). In white-box testing an internal perspective of the system, as well as programming skills, are used to design test cases. The tester chooses inputs to exercise paths through the code and determine the appropriate outputs. This is analogous to testing nodes in a circuit, e.g. in-circuit testing (ICT).

White-box testing can be applied at the unit, integration and system levels of the software testing process. Although traditional testers tended to think of white-box testing as being done at the unit level, it is used for integration and system testing more frequently today. It can test paths within a unit, paths between units during integration, and between subsystems during a system-level test.

NEW QUESTION: 2

Mr. Primm: If hospitals were private enterprises, dependent on profits for their survival, there would be no teaching hospitals, because of the intrinsically high cost of running such hospitals.

Ms. Nakai: I disagree. The medical challenges provided by teaching hospitals attract the very best physicians. This, in turn, enables those hospitals to concentrate on no routine cases.

Which of the following, if true, would most strengthen Ms. Nakai's attempt to refute Mr. Primm's claim?

- A. Existing teaching hospitals derive some revenue from public subsidies.
- B. Sophisticated, no routine medical care commands a high price.
- C. The patient mortality rate at teaching hospitals is high.
- D. The modern trend among physicians is to become highly specialized.
- E. Doctors at teaching hospitals command high salaries.
