Your network contains a server named Server1 that runs Windows Server 2008 R2.

You install three new hard disk drives on Server1. The drives are identical in size.

You need to create a volume by using the three new disk drives. The volume must meet the following requirements:

Which type of volume should you create?

- A. spanned
- B. RAID-5
- C. striped
- D. mirrored

Answer: C

Explanation:

RAID 0 - Striped

Fast, reads and writes to all disks at the same time

Flexible, can be used with any number of disks

Cheap, uses all disks in the array for data.

-Non redundant

-Dangerous: failure risk increases with every disk added to the array. If one disk failes all data is lost. RAID 1 - Mirrored

-Slow, needs to write the same data to all disks,

-Inflexible, needs an even number of disks.

-Costly, only 50% of the available total disk space can be used (the other 50% is used for the mirror)

Redundant
Safe RAID 5 - Striped with distributed parity
Fast, reads and writes to all - 1 disks at the same time
Flexible, can be used with any number of disks, but needs atleast 3.
Less expensive, uses all - 1 disks in the array for data.
Penalty is max 33%, penalty shrinks with every disk added to the array.
Redundant
Safe Spanned - Just a Bunch Of Disks
-Slow, writes to one disk, untill it is filled up.
